問題V 次の文章について設問に答えよ。解答番号は  ～

An old English saying goes, “So many men, so many minds.” There are many different peoples in this world, and they have their  cultures and characters. Each should respect the differences of others. These differences in culture and character often cause trouble in the world of international business. A common business custom in one country may not be  in another country.

Most of the problems are small, but occasionally a misunderstanding causes a big problem in business. For example, a French fashion designer made a very nice-looking dress with some abstract<sup>1</sup> prints on it. Many people liked the design, but it never became popular in Arab countries. The designer later found  that one of the printed designs resembled an insulting<sup>2</sup> word in Arabic. Finally, they stopped selling this particular dress and after suffering a large loss,  formally to the Arab people.

Executives of American automobile makers long wondered why their cars were not accepted in Japan. They knew that the traffic system in Japan was completely opposite  the U.S., but they did not realize  inconvenient and sometimes dangerous vehicles are that have the steering wheel on the left-hand side. Now they realize this serious difference and have begun to make cars with steering wheels on the right for export to Japan.

People all over the world, however, are basically the same; they share the same . They cry when they are sad, and they smile when they are happy. So cultural differences are not permanent barriers to making friendship and to buying and selling goods. We can learn and understand each other’s cultural differences through business contacts.

We often need what other people have and they often need what we have. The phrase “universal acceptance” means that when a product is designed, awareness of the cultural differences of prospective<sup>3</sup> customers is very important. If a company’s policy takes into  these cultural differences, misunderstandings in business transactions<sup>4</sup> can be avoided.
