問題V 次の文章について設問に答えよ。解答番号は ～

In the summer of 1993, Ron Semaio, director of programming for the U.S. sports cable channel ESPN¹, came up with an idea for a new sports program. While he was watching television one afternoon, Semaio started to think about how young people liked to do extreme² sports, like skateboarding, snowboarding, and BMX³ bike riding. He thought of an event people could watch athletes compete in these sports in a kind of extreme Olympics.

It took some time to the management at ESPN that the idea showed promise, and then it took even longer to organize the competition. Finally, in the summer of 1995, the first Extreme Games took in Rhode Island in the United States. More than 350 athletes from around the world came to compete in events such bungee jumping, windsurfing, BMX biking, and skateboarding. The competitions were shown on ESPN and were a big hit, especially with males between twelve and thirty years old.

The of the first show resulted in the competition becoming an annual event. The second year, ESPN renamed the competition the X Games. The organizers also announced that they would a winter X Games that year. In the winter games, athletes competed in BMX racing snow, snowboarding, ice climbing, and various ski competitions.
