Experts suggest that university students should sleep seven to nine hours every night. Between studying, homework, part-time jobs and club activities, however, many students simply cannot find hours in the day to get a good night's sleep. For them, getting sound sleep is something they can only dream of. That's why doctors taking a short nap¹ between noon and 3 p.m. By taking a short nap, your brain will not reach the deep sleep stage. With your brain in the sleep stage, your muscle activity and your brain activity will slow down. When you wake up, your body will feel more refreshed and more .

People take naps for reasons. You should schedule a “planned nap” when you know that you have to stay up later than usual, in order to store up energy. An “emergency nap” is the kind you would take if you became tired. A “habitual nap” is one that you take at the time every day.

Remember, you shouldn't nap for too long. If you do, you might wake up feeling even more than you were before you fell asleep.
